Chapters Eleven–Twelve

Ralph, Piggy, Sam, and Eric travel to the Castle Rock to retrieve Piggy's glasses. Ralph and Jack fight, and the tribe restrains Sam and Eric. Roger releases a leveraged rock, shattering the conch and killing Piggy. Jack and his tribe attack Ralph, and he flees into the jungle. Ralph discovers that Sam and Eric were forced to join Jack's tribe. Sam and Eric warn Ralph about Jack's plan to hunt and kill him the next day. The tribe sets fire to the jungle and forces Ralph out onto the open beach, where he finds a British naval officer. The officer sumes the boys are playing war games and having adventures. After learning of the two dech and eeing the boys' condition, he criticizes them for not acting like proper British boys. Jph sciences to grief and weeps for the end of innocence, the darkness inside m. ar the fried Pigre, causing the other boys to cry also. 4. Moments before his death, Piggy asks Jack's tribe. "''hhi horther—to be a pack of painted Indians like you are, or to be sensible like Ralph is on horther rules and agree, or to hunt and kill...law and rescue, or hunting and boaking to horther up?" (p. 180)? Why do you think Piggy believes he can reason with Jack'. "be 'es, 'e a that has happened? (Answers will vary. Piggy relies on society's rules and horther on the case of the conch. He expects others to live by the same standards. Piggy assume the the other is a horther of the same standards of the completely surrendered to in the same instincts.)

- 5. How is Piggy's death significant? (Answers will vary. Piggy's death symbolizes the loss of intelligence and reason on the island. By holding on to the conch, Piggy was holding on to the structured rules of civilization that he valued. The destruction of the conch symbolizes the loss of law and order. Ralph loses Piggy's intellectual advice and will now have to fight Jack alone. Students may also note that, while Simon's death could be viewed as an accident, Piggy's death was premeditated by Roger. Jack's tribe has finally sunk so low as to commit murder. It is now uncertain if the boys will ever be able to return from their descent into t vachery.)
- 6. Explain the meaning of "The hangman's horror ' ng ind is oger]" (p. 182). How does Roger's savagery differ from Jack's? (Roger is ing impare, to a public executioner, and the "hangman's horror" is guilt that person, iging fere, fte, nex ution. Roger's savagery differs from Jack's because Roger actually enjoys burn, if of its sack is a tyrant and acts violently when he feels it is necessary—not just because 'e the ks is jun.)

He misse "Pigg, as the contended off his survival is the survival is the flees the tribe and he becomes the real national, his survival is the sting of the swiftness of fear' (10).
- 10. What is ironic about Jack's wildfire? (Jack and kin salph by creating the wildfire, instead the fire brings rescue. Also, it is when save the boys despite Ralph's diger at keeping the signal fire lit.)
- 11. A deus ex machina is the une be danial of someone or some ling hat povides a quick resolution in extreme difficuent. The British naval officer is a constant of the wind wind. Why do you think the author chose to enot the story with this litent vervice? (Construction of the boys from the officer's point of view reminds readers the the action of an extraordinary black cap..." [p. 201]. The author also constructed the story with Ralph and Jack, perhaps asking readers to consider the fine line between construction of the story of the story of the story with Ralph and Jack, perhaps asking readers to consider the fine line between construction of the story been able to put up a better show the story of the story of the adult civilization is also at war. This irony is highlighted by the novel's last sentence where the officer turns away to look at his warship. The deus ex machina provides hope at the end of the story and leaves readers thinking about the novel's messages.)

- 12. What is significant about Percival's inability to remember his name? (Percival demonstrates how far removed the boys are from civilization. Earlier in the novel, Percival is able to introduce himself with his full name and home address but cannot remember his telephone number. This was a sign that he was already slipping away from society, but his inability to even remember his name shows just how far he has slipped. Disorder has replaced all knowledge of the boys' former lives in society.)
- 13. Why does Ralph weep at the end of the novel when the ficer saves them? (Ralph weeps "for the end of innocence, the darkness of man's hech [p. 1], and the loss of Piggy. Ralph's experiences on the island change him from being ist boy who is happy to be free from adult supervision to a much more mature boy the loss of me of do the and now knows about the inherent evil within humans.
