How to Use This Literature Guide

Today's standards demand rigor and relevance in the reading of complex texts. The units in this series guide teachers in a rich and deep exploration of worthwhile works of literature for classroom study. The most rigorous instruction can also be interesting and engaging!

Many current strategies for effective literacy instruction have been incorporated into these instructional guides for literature. Throughout the units, text-dependent questions are used to determine comprehension of the book as well as student interpretation of the vocabulary words. The books chosen for the series are complex exemplars of carefully crafted works of literature. Close reading is used throughout the units to guide students toward revisiting the text and using textual evidence to respond to prompts orally and in writing. Students must analyze the story elements in multiple assignments for each section of the book. All of these strategies work together to rigorously guide students through their study of literature.

The next few pages will make clear how to use this guide for a purposeful and meaningful literature study. Each section of this guide is set up in the same way to make it easier for you to implement the instruction in your classroom.

Theme Thoughts

The great works of literature used throughout this series have important themes that have been relevant to people for many years. Many of the themes will be discussed during the various sections of this instructional guide. However, it would also benefit students to have independent time to think about the key themes of the novel.

Before students begin reading, have them complete Pre-Reading Theme Thoughts (page 13). This graphic organizer will allow students to think about the themes outside the context of the story. They'll have the opportunity to evaluate statements based on important themes and defend their opinions. Be sure to have students keep their papers for comparison to the Post-Reading Theme Thoughts (page 64). This graphic organizer is similar to the pre-reading activity. However, this time, students will be answering the questions from the point of view of one of the characters of the novel. They have to think about how the character would feel about each statement and defend their thoughts. To conclude the activity, have students compare what they thought about the themes before they read the novel to what the characters discovered during the story.

Vocabulary

Each teacher overview page has definitions and sentences about how key vocabulary words are used in the section. These words should be introduced and discussed with students. There are two student vocabulary activity pages in each section. On the first page, students are asked to define the ten words chosen by the author of this unit. On the second page in most sections, each student will select at least eight words that he or she finds interesting or difficult. For each section, choose one of these pages for your students to complete. With either assignment, you may want to have students get into pairs to discuss the meanings of the words. Allow students to use reference guides to define the words. Monitor students to make sure the definitions they have found are accurate and relate to how the words are used in the text.

On some of the vocabulary student pages, students are asked to answer text-related questions about the vocabulary words. The following question stems will help you create your own vocabulary questions if you'd like to extend the discussion.

- How does this word describe _____'s character?
- In what ways does this word relate to the problem in this story?
- How does this word help you understand the setting?
- In what ways is this word related to the story's solution?
- Describe how this word supports the novel's theme of
- What visual images does this word bring to your mind?
- For what reasons might the author have chosen to use this particular word?

At times, more work with the words will help students understand their meanings. The following quick vocabulary activities are a good way to further study the words.

- Have students practice their vocabulary and writing skills by creating sentences and/or paragraphs in which multiple vocabulary words are used correctly and with evidence of understanding.
- Students can play vocabulary concentration. Students make a set of cards with the words and a separate set of cards with the definitions. Then, students lay the cards out on the table and play concentration. The goal of the game is to match vocabulary words with their definitions.
- Students can create word journal entries about the words. Students choose words they think are important and then describe why they think each word is important within the novel.

Analyzing the Literature

After students have read each section, hold small-group or whole-class discussions. Questions are written at two levels of complexity to allow you to decide which questions best meet the needs of your students. The Level 1 questions are typically less abstract than the Level 2 questions. Level 1 is indicated by a square, while Level 2 is indicated by a triangle.

These questions focus on the various story elements, such as character, setting, and plot. Student pages are provided if you want to assign these questions for individual student work before your group discussion. Be sure to add further questions as your students discuss what they've read. For each question, a few key points are provided for your reference as you discuss the novel with students.

Reader Response

In today's classrooms, there are often great readers who are below average writers. So much time and energy is spent in classrooms getting students to read on grade level, that little time is left to focus on writing skills. To help teachers include more writing in their daily literacy instruction, each section of this guide has a literature-based reader response prompt. Each of the three genres of writing is used in the reader responses within this guide: narrative, informative/explanatory, and argument. Students have a choice between two prompts for each reader response. One response requires students to make connections between the reading and their own lives. The other prompt requires students to determine text-to-text connections or connections within the text.

Close Reading the Literature

Within each section, students are asked to closely reread a short section of text. Since some versions of the novels have different page numbers, the selections are described by chapter and location, along with quotations to guide the readers. After each close reading, there are text-dependent questions to be answered by students.

Encourage students to read each question one at a time and then go back to the text and discover the answer. Work with students to ensure that they use the text to determine their answers rather than making unsupported inferences. Once students have answered the questions, discuss what they discovered. Suggested answers are provided in the answer key.

The generic, open-ended stems below can be used to write your own text-dependent questions if you would like to give students more practice.

- Give evidence from the text to support
- Justify your thinking using text evidence about
- Find evidence to support your conclusions about
- What text evidence helps the reader understand . . . ?
- Use the book to tell why _____ happens.
- Based on events in the story,
- Use text evidence to describe why

Making Connections

The activities in this section help students make cross-curricular connections to writing, mathematics, science, social studies, or the fine arts. Each of these types of activities requires higher-order thinking skills from students.

Creating with the Story Elements

It is important to spend time discussing the common story elements in literature. Understanding the characters, setting, and plot can increase students' comprehension and appreciation of the story. If teachers discuss these elements daily, students will more likely internalize the concepts and look for the elements in their independent reading. Another important reason for focusing on the story elements is that students will be better writers if they think about how the stories they read are constructed.

Students are given three options for working with the story elements. They are asked to create something related to the characters, setting, or plot of the novel. Students are given a choice on this activity so that they can decide to complete the activity that most appeals to them. Different multiple intelligences are used so that the activities are diverse and interesting to all students.

Analyzing the Literature

Provided below are discussion questions you can use in small groups, with the whole class, or for written assignments. Each question is given at two levels so you can choose the right question for each group of students. Activity sheets with these questions are provided (pages 18–19) if you want students to write their responses. For each question, a few key discussion points are provided for your reference.

Story Element	■ Level 1	▲ Level 2	Key Discussion Points
Setting	Describe the setting of the story.	Why do you think the author chose to set the story in the 1930s instead of in the 1960s when it was written?	The story takes place in the small town of Maycomb, Alabama, during the Great Depression in the 1930s. Everyone knows everyone else and times are tough, with people getting by any way they can. Students' opinions will vary but may include the following ideas: this is when the author grew up, the 1930s show more obvious racism, or people reading the novel in 1960 are able to be more objective about the past instead of the time in which they are living.
Character	Describe Scout and Jem's relationship.	Compare and contrast Scout and Jem's relationship to your relationship with your siblings or other siblings you know.	In many ways, their relationship is typical of siblings. They argue, Scout annoys Jem, and she feels left out when he doesn't include her. However, they are very close and spend a lot of time playing together. They are also protective of each other.
Character	How is Atticus different from others in Maycomb?	What advantages and/or disadvantages could Atticus's differences bring him?	Atticus is educated, as are his children. He doesn't drink, gamble, or hunt like other men in the town and is nonjudgmental. Advantages could be that he is respected and esteemed; disadvantages could be that he might feel disconnected from others because of his differences and has to do the work others do not want to do.
Plot	How has Jem shown bravery in these chapters so far?	Has Jem shown true bravery in his antics with the Radleys? Explain your thinking.	Jem has several situations in which he feels he has shown bravery regarding the Radleys: he touches the house and peeks in the window, helps Scout and Dill escape, and returns for his pants. Students' responses on if these antics show true bravery will vary.

Analyzing the Literature

Directions: Think about the section you have just read. Read each question and state your response with textual evidence.

1. Describe the setting of the story.

2. Describe Scout and Jem’s relationship.

3. How is Atticus different from others in Maycomb?

4. How has Jem shown bravery in these chapters so far?

Close Reading the Literature

Directions: Closely reread the section in chapter 3 in which Walter goes home with Scout and Jem for lunch. Start when they arrive at the house, “By the time we reached our front steps . . .” Continue reading until Burris leaves the classroom, “He waited until he was sure she was crying.” Read each question and then revisit the text to find the evidence that supports your answer.

1. Use the text to describe the different ways Calpurnia and Scout feel about Walter eating at the house.

2. Though both Walter Cunningham and Burris Ewell are poor, use information in the book to explain how they are different.

3. Give evidence to show that Miss Caroline is an outsider in Maycomb.

4. According to the section, why is Burris at school?

Creating with the Story Elements

Directions: Thinking about the story elements of character, setting, and plot in a novel is very important to understanding what is happening and why. Complete one of the following activities about what you've read so far. Be creative and have fun!

Characters

Use your imagination and your knowledge of the characters to rewrite the following scene from Dill's point of view. Rewrite the end of chapter 1 when Dill dares Jem to approach the Radley house, argues about lighting a match under a turtle, and runs away after Jem finally touches the house.

Setting

Draw a map of Scout's neighborhood. Use the book to figure out where Scout's neighbors would be located, as well as the school, post office, and any other places mentioned.

Plot

Create a comic strip retelling Scout, Jem, and Dill's escapade in chapter 6 when they attempt to peek in the window at Boo Radley's house.
